CALAMITA, N.J. & SATTOROVA, M. (eds.): The Regionalization of International Investment Treaty Arrangements, British Institute of International and Comparative Law, 2015. ISBN: 978-1-905221-54-7.

Description: States are increasingly framing their international investment agreements within larger regional arrangements. What began most prominently with the North American Free Trade Agreement in the 1990s is coming to be emulated across the globe. Over the past ten years, major regional arrangements have been adopted in Asia and Africa and more are on the way. The on-going negotiations for a Trans-Pacific Partnership Agreement (TPP), encompassing countries from Asia, North and South America portend a potentially major shift in the international investment treaty landscape. Moreover, concurrent negotiations between the European Union and the United States for a Transatlantic Trade and Investment Partnership (TTIP) raise the possibility of an agreement on rules and standards between the two largest sources of foreign direct investment.

The regionalization of investment treaty arrangements raises important and timely issues for policy-makers, practitioners and academics. The contributions to this volume examine the contents and character of this new generation of agreements and address the difficult questions raised by the coexistence of regional and bilateral investment treaties. In addition, the contributions in this volume investigate the motivations behind regionalization and critically ask what regionalization tells us about the future of international investment law.

CREPET DAIGREMONT, C.: La clause de la nation la plus favorisée, Paris, Pedone, 2015, 506 pp. ISBN: 978-2-233-00774-2.

Technique ancienne du droit des traités, la clause de la nation la plus favorisée connaît une vigueur renouvelée du fait de l'évolution considérable des relations économiques internationales depuis les années 1970. Disposition fondamentale du GATT et des accords OMC, longtemps conclue en matière diplomatique et consulaire et dans le domaine de la condition des étrangers, elle est aussi présente dans les traités de promotion et de protection des investissements étrangers et s'applique parfois en matière fiscale.

Issu d'une thèse soutenue à l'Université Panthéon-Assas sous la direction de Charles Leben, le présent ouvrage étudie la clause de la nation la plus
